Headline:
Warm, with sunny spells but also heavy showers in places.

Today:
On the cloudy side at first, but becoming brighter through the morning. This should spark further scattered showers, with some heavy and locally prolonged with a risk of thunder. Rather warm and humid, but fresher and breezier in coastal districts. Maximum temperature 24 deg C (75 deg F).

Tonight:
Scattered showers should gradually die away during the evening, leaving a mainly dry and mild night, tempered by the continuing breeze. Remaining rather cloudy. Minimum temperature 14 deg C (57 deg F).

Saturday:
Rather cloudy at first, but otherwise a drier and brighter day, with some sunny spells. Isolated showers perhaps developing in the east later, these fewer and lighter than of late. Maximum temperature 24 deg C (75 deg F).

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
Drier and fresher Sunday, with Monday probably largely fine, ahead of the chance of warm and muggy conditions spreading from the south Tuesday, perhaps accompanied by heavy showers and thunderstorms.
